These are four common scenarios that oftentimes indicate a client could benefit from the support of a professional caregiver:

1. They are not safe alone.
   If your client has some form of cognitive impairment, or is simply struggling with any of the following: medication management, meal preparation, safety and mobility, socialization, transportation, or personal hygiene.

2. They need more daily engagement.
   A professional caregiver is a companion that provides a supportive and positive relationship with your client. At Home Care Assistance, our caregivers are trained in our proprietary Balanced Care Method™, a holistic approach to care that promotes a healthy mind, body and spirit in our clients. Caregivers are not only trained in Alzheimer’s and dementia care, but activities to engage and stimulate the mind and how to create moments of delight based on what the client enjoys doing.

3. There is a change in condition or an upcoming surgery.
   After a fall, surgery, or procedure, your client may benefit from having a caregiver help with errands, meal prep, bathing, transportation and medication reminders, especially if the family does not live close by. Our Hospital to Home program ensures a successful discharge, seamless transition home and reduces avoidable hospital readmissions by ensuring the client is safe and following proper protocols.

4. What they have in place is not working.
   If the care provider that is currently in place is not the right fit, whether it’s another home care agency, private caregiver, family caregiver or a community, give us a call today to better understand how we can partner to support your care plans, create a positive caregiver/client match and promote healthy longevity for your clients.

As an Aging Life Care Professional®, you always want what is best for your client. Here are some crucial signs that indicate your client and his or her family members may benefit from home care services.